2013 AEESP 50th Anniversary Conference (July 14 - 16, 2013) Environmental Engineers and Scientists of 2050: Education, Research, and Practice

The world population is projected to grow from 7 billion today to over 9 billion by 2050. Environmental engineers and scientists will play an important role in society in addressing complex and interdisciplinary issues such as sustainable development and globalization. The environmental engineer and scientist of 2050 needs to have the knowledge and experience required to facilitate engineering solutions to the environmental interplay between food, energy, water within a sustainable community context for domestic and international venues. The 2013 AEESP Conference provides a forum for our community to discuss these issues and better prepare ourselves and our students with the skills needed to improve the global situation.

The Conference is a joint effort of Colorado School of Mines, the University of Colorado, Boulder, and the University of Colorado, Denver, and will be hosted at Colorado School of Mines.

The 2013 AEESP Education and Research Conference in Colorado is built around the theme of the sustainable community of 2050. Research and education topics include:

1. Environmental life-cycle assessment of infrastructure
2. Sustainable development
3. Sustainable cities
4. Intersection of water and energy
5. Climate change
6. Watershed scale management
7. Waste to energy
8. Zero waste realization
9. Inter-disciplinary and Systems Thinking/Learning

With an expected conference attendance of 400, including approximately 100 graduate students from the best environmental engineering and science programs from across the United States and beyond, potential sponsoring organizations should inquire about opportunities as soon as possible.

Contact Melody Francisco regarding conference sponsorship coordinator, or for general questions about the conference and registration at (303)-279-9234 or AEESP2013@mines.edu.
